Numenia and the Hurricane by Fiona Holliday

When the autumnal equinox arrives, Numenia takes off with her two sisters and thousands of other birds to begin their long migration from the Arctic to the islands of the Caribbean. But there is a dangerous storm brewing on the horizon. When the hurricane hits, fierce winds rip Numenia away from her family.

This small, scrappy whimbrel must make her way through unfamiliar terrain and rough conditions to reunite with her sisters. Battling hunger, loneliness, and raging winds, Numenia finds the strength to endure the elements on her miraculous journey.

SHOREBIRDS AND SEABIRDS!

- Alaska has recorded 77 species of shorebirds. That is 1/3 of the total species in the world.
- The terms shorebird and seabird have similar meanings and are often used interchangeably. Shorebirds are birds that are found near the edge of bodies of water. Seabirds are birds that spend most of their time in or flying over coastal waters.
- A puffin's beak changes color throughout the year. It is a dull gray in the winter, then changes to bright orange in the spring.
- The Sea of Cortez, in California, is home to the smallest seabird in the world. The Least Storm Petrel weighs in at only 1 ounce.
- The largest seabird in the world is the Wandering Albatross. It can get as tall as 4 ½' and can have a wingspan measuring a whopping 11'!
- Seabirds have their own natural built-in sunglasses. Their eyes contain special droplets of red oil in the retinas, which act as a sun filter to help with the glare from the sea and sand.
- Flamingoes get their coloring from the microscopic water plants and animals they eat.
- The Alaska SeaLife Center in Seward cares for about 13 different species of birds; approximately 150 individual birds.
