a Message from the Mermaid and the FrostbitFins Pod

Hello, FeatherFins!

Did you know that this issue of the FeatherFin Flyer marks the end of the third year we've been putting these together? Kudos go out to Randi, who does all the research for the newsletter every month. We couldn't have done it without her!

Of course - the newsletter is a bit later than usual this month - so we're gonna blame the Pirate for running off with our Mermaid after Halloween! Pirates. Constantly creating chaos. Gotta watch them every moment! Don't worry though - as you all know, all it takes is a Cinnamon Roll and AnneMeridia will join us again.

Speaking of Halloween - we saw so many super cute FeatherFins in super cute costumes! You all looked AWESOME! Special thanks go out to Nila at the Peninsula Center Mall, and everyone at NPRSA for inviting us to join in the fun.

Lastly - Happy November, everyone! The air is cold, there's snow on the ground, it's almost time for our Christmas Vendor Show circuit! If you need mermaid items for your loved ones for Christmas, be sure to come and see us at a show. We have new items, as well as some fan favorites, too.

Sea ya soon!

NOVEMBER FIN FACTS WITH

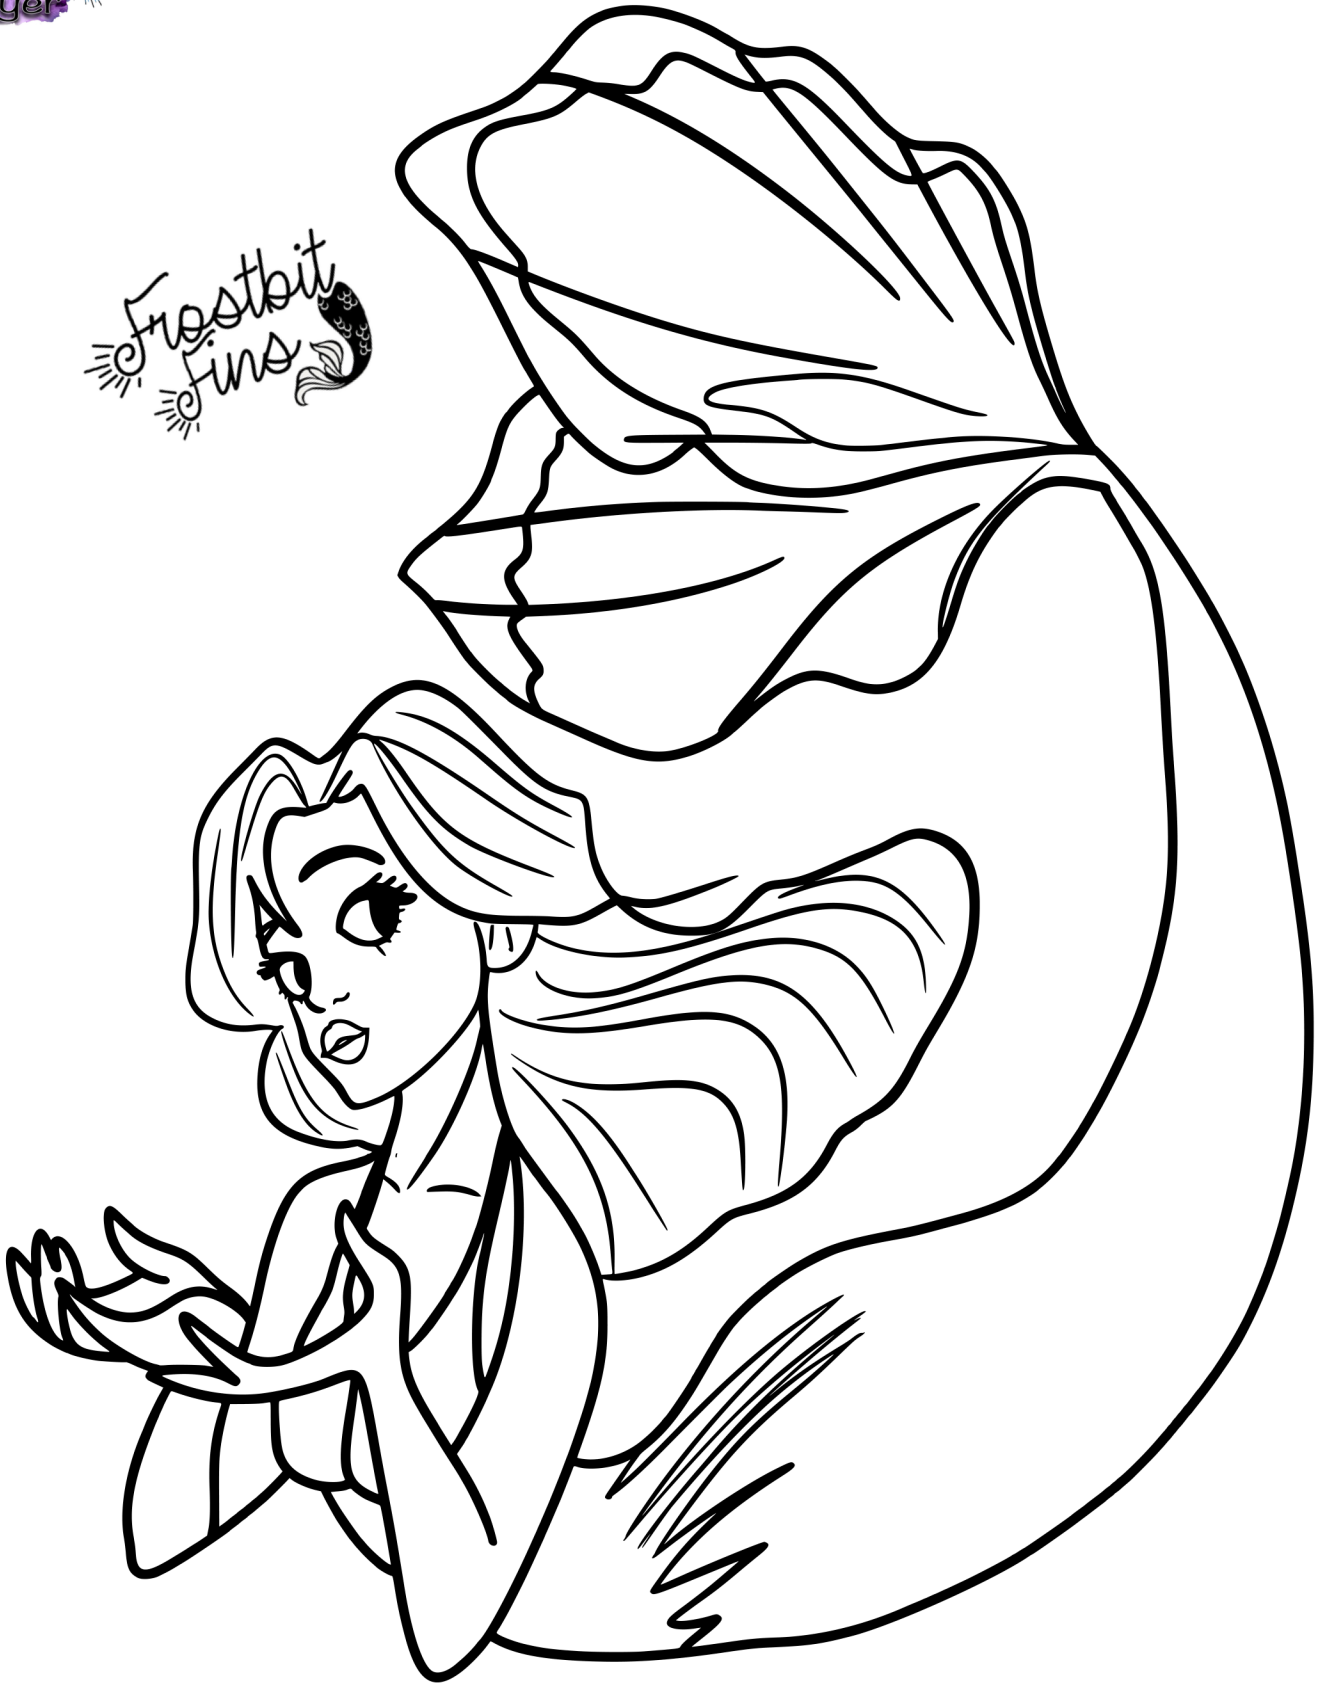

LOBSTER!

- Lobsters are invertebrate arthropods, meaning they have a hard protective exoskeleton and no backbone.
- There are about 49 species of lobster in various oceans throughout the world.
- Lobsters like to live in fresh and brackish (slightly salty) water at the murky and muddy bottom of the sea.
- Lobsters live singly and make their homes in crevices and burrows on the sea floor or under rocks where they can hide from predators.
- A lobster's body is made up of multiple segments. The cephalothorax (head and upper body) contains up to 14 fused segments and the abdomen contains 6 unfused segments.
- Lobsters have pairs of legs. They use one pair to catch food. Their legs also contain their taste sensors.
- Lobsters are more closely related to insects than any other living creature. As such, baby lobsters are usually referred to as "bugs" or "crickets".
- Lobsters are omnivores and eat anything they can get their claws on. While they prefer crab, starfish, mussels, mollusks, clams, and shrimp, they will eat things like aquatic plants and sponges when necessary.
- As they grow lobsters shed their exoskeleton. They will often eat part of their old shell to get enough calcium to keep their new exoskeleton healthy.
- Lobsters communicate by peeing at each other. They have a bladder on each side of their head and a type of nozzle under each eye. They use these nozzles to spray urine at other lobsters to communicate messages.
